Back in 1979, as I entered UT, Buzz Aldrin came to my dorm room to pitch me on investing in Starcraft Boosters. It was a booster with a swing wing, launch vertically, land in a runway. I have invested in numerous commercial space startups. Hard to beat SpaceX these days.

My diploma work with the German Aerospace Center focused on re-usable winged boosters. At that time back in 2000, we called them LFBB (Liquid Fly-back booster). If you like, I can give you some input on that. twitter.com/RichardGarriot...

If you still like to invest in interesting ideas for space travel check out @memcculloch's QI theory. He's trying to prove it but needs help.

Extraordinary claims require extraordinary evidence. If he is on the right track... the science community should back him. Fundamental science is hard to back with "investors". High risk, long lead times.

Is this a joke that went over my head or is the year a typo? Why would Buzz Aldrin pitch to you in 1979? Or were you famous for something at the time before the games?

He's not kidding - he was involved in entrepreneurial efforts back then and many of the Apollo guys were branching out into business or starting their own companies

And I believe we met at one of the space gala dinner parties in DC years back! I can't remember the name sadly
